THE STEAM ENGINE. Improvements in Construction and Possi-bilities of Power.

The improvements which have marked the development of the steam engine have been the result of their application to their promotion of more mechanical genius, higher skill, more brain power generally, than probably have ever been given, in the history of the world, to any other directly useful purpose. The steam engine stands today as a nopler monument, a higher tribute to the genius of man, than any other product of his many and mighty powers that the world has yet seen.

It is the source and the foundation of all his material wealth and largely of old and is a shade darker than a mutatto. world's fair, wrote as follows to the EAGLE his intellectual and moral wealth. It is the prime mover in every application of his inventive and instructive genius to the solution of the problems of modern civilization. It drives the machinery of mine, mill and workshop; it transports him and his possessions across the continents and over the seas it gives life to the whole system of transmission of all the energies, including those of the electric light and the electric railway. It makes all that he has and is a possibility, and stands, the mist giant, a genius of more than Aladdin-like power, the maker and the guardian of modern life.

Light, heat and electricity, all the powers of nature, are but its servants and do its work and run its errands at arm's length or miles away, in the extension of its powers to near and dis- lars a day.

In performing the work of modern civilization man has compelled the service of over fifty million herse power of steam giants, equivalent to more than seventy-five million horses of average power, for the rated horse power of the steam engine is to that extent in excess of the power of the animal. working power of the whole population of the globe, and probably largely sees of that amount -Engineering | said the general
